

Executive HR Summary & Recommendations

Top Attrition Drivers: The three factors that most strongly predict an employee will leave are Monthly Income, OverTime, and Age.

Areas of Immediate Focus: HR should immediately prioritize retention efforts within the Sales Department, specifically targeting Sales Representatives, as they exhibit the highest flight risk across the company.

The Salary Question: Salary alone does not explain attrition. While Monthly Income is the strongest predictor, OverTime and poor Work-Life Balance ratings are also massive drivers. This indicates a lethal combination of burnout rather than just compensation issues alone.

Actionable HR Recommendations:

1. Targeted Sales Interventions: Implement a mandatory check-in for all new Sales Representatives to review workload, adjust territories, and ensure adequate training, as early-tenure sales roles are the most vulnerable.

2. Overtime & Burnout Audit: Create a hard cap on allowable OverTime for lower-income brackets, or mandate immediate compensation/bonus reviews for employees who frequently log high overtime hours to offset burnout.

Model Limitations: The HR team should be aware that this model relies on a relatively small, imbalanced dataset (1,470 employees). Furthermore, AI cannot measure unquantifiable human elements—such as a toxic relationship with a direct manager or personal family circumstances—meaning this tool should be used as limited, not to make automated HR decisions.
